In June 2014, Prime Minister Shinzo Abe completed an update of his economic policy agenda, putting forward proposals on subjects from tax and investment to agricultural reform that he hopes will improve Japan's growth prospects and impress global investors. This "third arrow" is part of Abe's three-pronged effort to invigorate Japan's economy, along with the fiscal and monetary stimulus he introduced last year. What impact will the components of the "third arrow" have on U.S.–Japan business, political and economic relationships? Please join us for a panel discussion among members of the U.S. and Japanese houses of representatives.
